

CONFERENCE INFORMATION GUIDE

What's the concept?

Heart of a Servant, Mind of a Scholar, Inspiration of an Artist. The Artisan Leader: An Ed Leadership Conference Series is designed around these three core values:

1. Heart of a Servant. Service to others through leadership designed to build capacity, community, and life inside education organizations.
2. Mind of a Scholar. Sharp thought tools and challenging new approaches based on emerging research, leading edge literature, and best practice from inside and outside education.
3. Inspiration of an Artist. Professional learning designed to build leadership capacity for innovation, creativity, and transformation of the education workplace into one characterized by energy, stamina, and inspiration.

The conference site, meal and entertainment venues, agenda, materials, and learning designs are specifically crafted to deliver maximum learning in a premium, professional setting. The two-day, end of the week, format is designed to add value in a manner that fits the busy schedules of Ed leaders, and reserves the weekend for family and personal life. All conference sessions will be led by Mike Rutherford, with occasional co-facilitators. Lessons will be brisk and immediately reinforced through networking and team learning. Additionally, the conference experience is designed to equip attendees to return to their schools and districts and lead the lessons, activities, and experiences for others.

How does the series work?

The following curriculum map lays out the plan. The Artisan Leader series will engage participants in nine leadership experiences. The nine experiences are grouped into three conferences. Each two-day conference develops Ed leaders' knowledge, skills, and values/beliefs through engagement in three of the nine experiences. Participants are invited to attend a single conference, two of the three, or the entire series. Participants who attend more than one conference will enjoy extra benefits from the complementary design of the entire series. Ed leaders who attend all three conferences, in any combination, will receive an Artisan Leader certification.

Who should attend?

The Artisan Leader series is not leadership 101. Rather, it is specifically crafted to meet the needs of experienced education executives – superintendents, central office leaders, principals and other successful education leaders who desire to take their leadership skills to the next level – to the great benefit of schools and districts they lead. Less experienced and novice education leaders can benefit also, especially in the context of a vertical team or mentoring relationship (see Bring a Vertical Team, below).

Three ways to attend:

- 1. Come by yourself. Education leaders are responsible for the growth of development of all employees. Sometimes, because of this focus on others, they neglect their own professional learning- to the detriment of themselves and the organizations they lead. Come to Charlotte, NC and enjoy two days of personally relevant professional learning and networking with growth-minded colleagues from all across North America.
- 2. Bring a team. Experience the two-day conference with the team of leaders who will be co-responsible for designing and leading success back home. Learn together, build chemistry, and create commitment. As an executive leader, this is a great opportunity to mentor and develop key “rising stars” who will shape the organization’s results well into the future.
- 3. Bring a vertical team. Develop leadership capacity throughout the organization by attending as a team comprised of a portion or version of this chain... a community member and/or parent + a school board member + superintendent or district leader + a principal + an AP + a rising teacher leader. Vertical teams help to establish a leadership language and approach that permeates the entire enterprise.
